Key to Immune Health

The importance of T, B, and NK cells in immune defense

T cells, B cells, and Natural Killer (NK) cells are crucial parts of the immune system, each with a unique role in defending the body. Together, they form a powerful defense system that detects and removes harmful substances, fights infections, and maintains healthy tissues.

T CELLS

T cells respond to foreign substances inside cells, destroying infected cells and coordinating immunity.

B CELLS

B cells produce antibodies to neutralize pathogens outside cells and store memory for future infections.

NK CELLS

NK cells attack invaders that enter the body, providing rapid defense against infected and abnormal cells.
