Ciao, bello. Ciao, bella.

It's true. We're picky.

Don't get us wrong. At Architonic, we love meeting people and will share an espresso and biscotti with (almost) anyone. But, when it comes to design brands, we're picky.

Carefully selecting and curating the landscape of premium design manufacturers and labels – and, in turn, enabling discerning architects, interior designers and planners to specify the best products, materials and other solutions for their projects – is what we do. And love.

But it's not just orientation in the online world that we provide. The painstakingly researched print guide you hold in your hands has long become a staple part of the Milan Design Week streetscape, trusted as it is by legions of design-hungry visitors to get them to the showrooms, pop-up locations and special installations across the city they want, and need, to visit in the most efficient way possible. While providing, of course, ample room for discovery (and a Campari Spritz) along the way.

So, whether you're planning to get busy in Brera or darting through Durini, we'll make sure your time in Milan is FOMO-free.

Simon Keane-Cowell
Architonic Editor-in-Chief

DESIGN CONTINUUM

A Study in Sensory Experience.

Design does not end with form.
It continues through transformation.
Ideas evolve into new materials.
Technologies open new possibilities.
Processes rethink how things are made.
Surfaces redefine sensual perceptions.

In this exhibition, Villeroy & Boch Group and Studio Elastique. use material, form and haptics to explore how design can create experiences and spaces of wellbeing.
Design continues – bringing something special into every day.

*Step inside the continuum
and experience it at:*

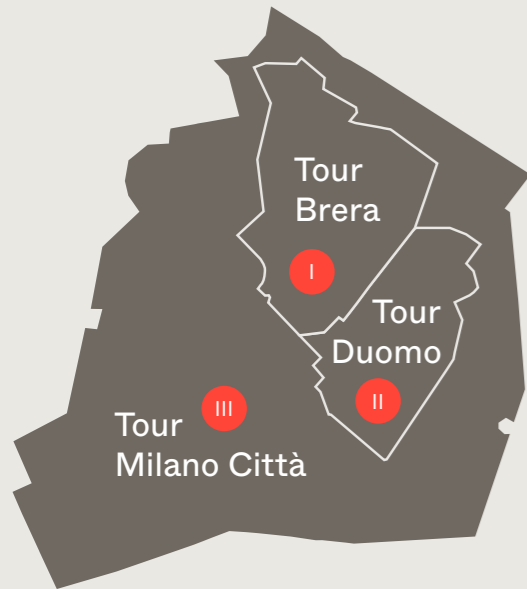

*Milan Design Week
21st - 26th of April*

Wilkhahn / What the surface remembers
with Aya Sasakura and Frank Schinski
Via Madonnina 17, 20123 Milano

With the WiChair and the exhibition "What the surface remembers," Wilkhahn pays homage to the raw materiality of steel. This installation explores the imprints of time, nature, and the human touch. From raw industrial precision to the poetic patina of oxidation, we celebrate steel as a living medium. By blending artistic fragments with the legacy of human use, Wilkhahn creates an immersive space that redefines durability, movement, and sustainable design.

Control freakery never looked this good

Innovative Italian design manufacturer Mara likes to keep it close. Very close.

Simon Keane-Cowell
Architonic Editor-in-Chief

The weather gods haven't been kind as I arrive at the Mara factory on the outskirts of Brescia. If you think Italy, certainly in the design industry, it's usually all sun-bleached locations, where an Aperol Spritz is only ever seconds away.

But climatic conditions are, quite frankly, the only thing the Italian furniture manufacturer doesn't have control over. Founded in 1960 by the current managing director Laura Marchina's grandfather, Camillo – who was an experienced metal-worker in the production of, of all things, gun barrels – the company, like the family itself, keeps everything close to home. Very close, in fact. The Mara story is not just 100% Made in Italy, it's 100% Brescia.

What happens in Brescia...

It's a tale of two movements, as it were. As the brand expands beyond its long-established office-furniture focus, adopting a bold, resolutely design-first strategy evinced in collaborations with the likes of Michele De Lucchi, Ferruccio Laviani, Christophe Pillet and Marcello Zilian, it has doubled down on the ownership of its production and supply chains. 'We have control over all parts of our industrial process,' says Marchina. 'The aim is to control costs, of course, so we can be competitive in the market. And to be as sustainable and circular as possible. But it's also about having a complete vision. From R&D and prototyping to manufacturing, finishing and shipping.'

We are the robots

Whether it's the company's multi-million-euro investment in state-of-the-art, automated machinery for three-dimensional laser-cutting, bending and welding, its commitment to sourcing its materials from the locality (Brescia happens to be Italy's steel-manufacturing capital), or the fact that Mara produces more energy that its operation requires thanks to its own, rooftop solar farm, near trumps far.

'We manufacture on demand,' explains Marchina, as she guides me through the production halls, 'meaning that we aim to deliver, even on large orders for contract, within four weeks. What's more, our external designers love the fact that they can experiment with us, as everything they need is on site. Including our expert technicians.'

Metal heads

And, my word, are those technicians expert. And incredibly friendly. My Italian is (how shall I put this?) woeful, but each of the workers I encounter as I tour Mara's production facility exude a pride, generously explaining to me what they do. Working metal is, simply put, their passion.

'Everything ultimately comes from a metal tube or a metal sheet,' explains Marchina. 'Sometimes, once the product is completed, you can't believe it's been made from these elements alone.' Indeed. Mara's industrial alchemy sees said tubes and sheets bent, cut, rounded and welded into designs that look like they've come out of a mould. The result: seating, tables and storage that is relatively light while possessing durability. It also means a minimising of material usage. Less being better.

And, true to Mara's keep-it-local philosophy, any waste is recycled at a facility a mere 10 kilometres from the factory.

As I'm shown a box containing small metal pins that are deployed during the production process but which are later discarded (recycled, naturally!) and am told that they, too, are produced in-house, I chuckle to myself. As a man of a certain age, it reminds me of the 1970s self-sufficiency movement. Do it yourself. But there's nothing DIY, at least in an aesthetic sense, about Mara's portfolio. 'We're constantly innovating to create sophisticated products that anticipate trends,' says Marchina. 'Our goal is to bring the functionality of the office into the home and the comfort and warmth of the home into the office, always putting the person and their well-being at the centre via an attention to ergonomics, materials and finishes.'

You heard the woman. Brescia is calling.

MILANO DESIGN WEEK
20 - 26 APRIL 2026

A Salone in full evolution

Three good reasons to be part of it

Every April, Milan becomes the place where the design world takes stock of itself. And central to this is the Salone del Mobile.Milano, whose 64th edition sees over 1,900 exhibitors from 32 countries show off and show out.

But the fair's sense of purpose goes well beyond the numbers it clocks up – from EuroCucina's highly anticipated return charting the future of kitchen design, to SaloneSatellite gathering 700 young designers around the theme of skilled craftsmanship and innovation.

Three new initiatives set the tone for the fair's 2026 edition. Salone Contract, master-planned by Rem Koolhaas and OMA, previews its vision for the contract landscape through talks and thematic pavilion itineraries, ahead of its full debut in 2027. While Salone Raritas, curated by Annalisa Rosso and designed by Formafantasma, gives collectible and high-end creative production a home of its own. And Aurea, by Maison Numéro 20, transforms an imaginary hotel into an immersive world of Art Deco, cinematic references and surrealism.

This is a fair in deliberate, considered evolution. As if you needed another reason to be in Milan this April!
